Is went to a garden party They all knew my name But no one recognized me..."

Ricky Nelson went to his garden party and was in for a real surprise. All they wanted was "Mary Lou" and "Johnny Be Good". None of the heavy stuff. George McGovern and Bill Spong were surprised, too.
Tom Eagleton wasn't.
Because on the surface, everyone was trying new things, but really only accepting the old ones.

It was a year of seeming differences, but little noticeable change. America decided that it was time for a rest, and settled down for what looked like a long winter's nap.

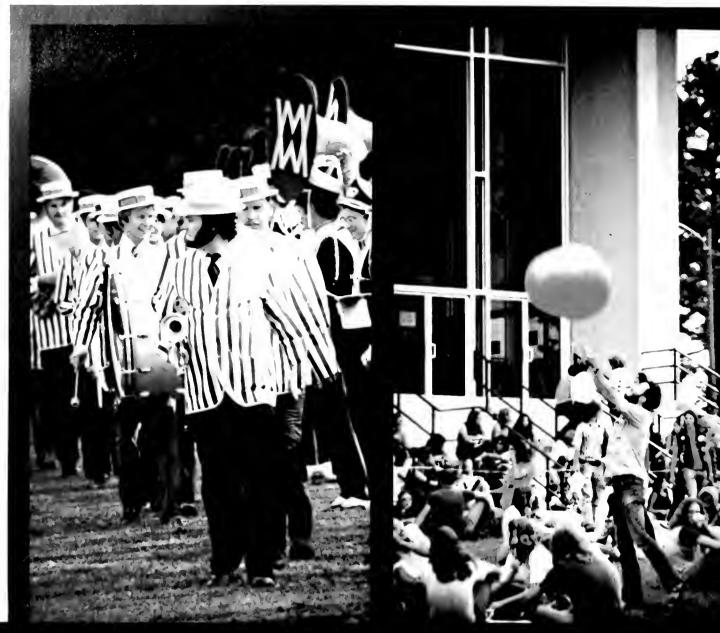

Within the masses of people there was ... you . You were an entity, though not an island. Tree to decide whatever the issue. On campus, the choice was yours with 24-7, interdisciplinary majors, and Gay Lib. Or in the outside world, the alternatives ranged from the 18-year old vote to independent political parties & Women's Lib.

Irredom sounded glamorous, but with it came some unglamorous responsibilities. This time the responsibility was on the individual. There was little formal authority to lean on — not even in loco parentis. And there was no field fiper to follow
— only Tricky Dicky. But worst of all, there were no dreamers to dream with; Lyndon Johnson died, along with his visions for a Great Society.

Decisions had to be made, you had to accept the responsibility for the choices. There was no one to blame this time, so you didn't stick your neck out...

Trinkle Hall could no longer be held responsible for indigestion; it was closed.

Distribution requirements were no longer the scapegoot for poor grades, and archaic social regulations could not be blamed for poor relationships with that other sex.

There was no one to blame for your decisions; and there weren't many people to whom to answer for them, either. But this didn't mean that there weren't strings attached; there were buen though there weren't many people to whom to answer, at least one was especially important: yourself.

For many people, however, there was one other especially important person:
The Other.

New social freedoms made possible by 24-7 and off-campus living were conducive to in-depth interpersonal relationships Somehow sharing a hotplate and washing dishes in a single sink led to deeper friendships. More than just sometimes a quiet evening of TV substituted for the riproaring drunks that had So typical before. Sometimes it hurt, more often it was good; but wasn't it better than no feeling at all?

Such relationships taught people much. Learning about the Other stimulated introspection.

There were others in your life... the people you turned to for outside companionship. Like drinking at the botball games, going to Frank's at 2am. or cutting classes to go to the beach. Doing your own thing was fun, too. Conforming to the Dating Game, Dope Scene, or the Grade Contest wasn't.

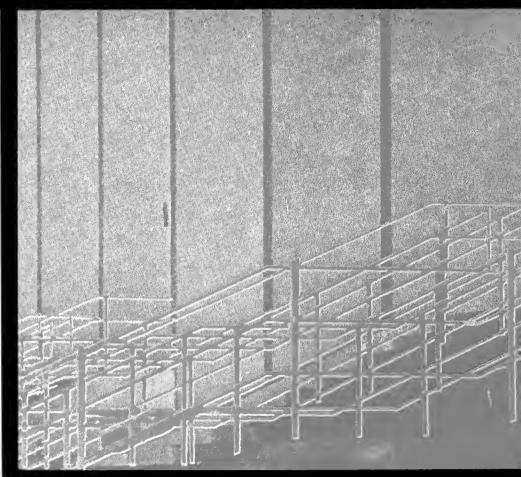

Companionship didn't always mean relationships with people. The campus had an endless variety of pets, ranging from exotic fish in expensive aquariums to turtles in breakfast bowls. You shared your dinner with Elvis at the Commons or fed the cat that lived in Barrett. you even took a liking to the mouse that you caught in your room at 3 a.m. But somehow, you just couldn't make friends with those down cockroaches.

The College delegated an increasing amount of authority to the campus' largest group: the students.

Talk of a new College Assembly filled the air, student-faculty committees became increasingly prominent, and dormitory residents made their own bylaws as new buildings sprang up overnight all over campus.

With this new burden,

State Senator Herbert Bateman predicted moral decay in the College community which would be broight about by the "implementation of Libertarian policies at the College, which are diametrically opposed to the public policy and standards of morality in the Commonwealth". Sorry Mr. Bateman, wrong again. Sure, many decisions were now made by Joe Student rather than Mr. Administrator. But Even though the decision-makers were different, the decisions were the same.

William and Mary was satisfied and complacent. The administration termed it a re-evaluation. Students have talked and administrators have listened; now both are Evaluating the Changes'

Whatever they called it, it came across as plain old apathy. The apathy that had allowed the war to last so long remained when the war ended in January. It didn't matter what it was. Students weren't interested. Whether it be Watergate sabotage or administrative shuffling. Wt M'crs didn't sæm to notice.

"A little out of time, but I don't mind," rasped Rook Stewart.
But who could say there was "never a dull moment"?

You minded your own business, your own friends, and your own world. Recycling wasn't just a word for garbage — it was the word for the whole year. Art, music, fashion, politics, and people had gone through the wash and come out just the same.

Vonger hair and cuffell pants were no disquise for the same old ideas. This time they were just printed on second-hand newsprint.

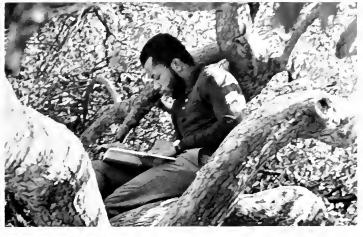

Individuality wasn't what we bargained for. It was hard... and very Lonesome.

Still... wasn't something salvaged?

Into a rather unsavory situation stepped the new head coach, Jim Root, who came to the Reservation from New Hampshire University. He inherited an offense that had been hit hard by graduation and a defense that had earned a reputation for breaking down when the game was on the line. The team was virtually devoid of seniors and Root knew that ### a rebuilding job was at hand.

The young Tribe leaped from the starting gate in a 31-7 opening game victory against Furman. Root's initial win at William and Mary was also the school's 300th of all time. All the Indians' scoring was done by sophomores. Doug Gerhart led the team with 121 yards rushing and two touchdowns. Bill Deery rushed for two more scores and Terry Regan added a field goal and four extra points. Junior Rip Scherer completed 10 of 16 passes, including six to All-American candidate David Knight.

The next two games mirrored the 1971 season as the Indians lost to Navy and Villanova in the last of the fourth quarter. Against the Middies, the Tribe fought to a 9–6 lead with four minutes to play, only to see Navy march 90 yards in twelve plays for the winning score. The defense was brilliant for 56 minutes, the rushing offense devastating, and as Root lamented,

"No loss ever hurt worse than this one."

Turnovers and a leaky defense victimized the Indians in the 20–17 loss to Villanova and the Tribe was anxious to return to Cary Field and Southern Conference action with the Citadel.

Against the Citadel, W&M scored on its first possession and kept scoring while a stingy defense held the Bulldogs to 12 points as the Tribe won, 31-12. Travel problems hampered the Indians as they flew to Morgantown to meet West Virginia. Three WVU touchdown bombs in the last five minutes of the first half contributed to their 28-0 halftime lead. W&M exploded for 34 points in the second half and although they finished on the short end of a 49-34 score, big Green supporters looked forward to a wide open offensive display against homecoming for Vanderbilt.

It was not to be.

Conservatism was the order of the day when the Indians had the ball. The Tribe assumed a 14-0 lead midway in the first half on a 59-yard bolt by Deery and a 29-yard touchdown reception by Knight. As W&M tried to sit on its lead, the Commodores, behind freshman quarterback, Fred Fisher, scored three touchdowns to win 21-17.

A 31-3 thrashing of worse than hapless VMI raised the Tribe's record to 3-4. Despite the rout fans across the state foresaw a Tribe disaster when the Indians would have to take on VPI in the Tobacco Bowl. The Indians entered the Tobacco Festival Mud Bowl 14 to 19 points underdogs to a hot Virginia Tech team, but parlayed a little luck, a lot of defense, and a clutch TD grab by Mark Smith into a 17-16 upset win over the Gobblers - William and Mary's first win over Tech since 1962. The lead see-sawed through the first three quarters. The Tribe went ahead to stay on an 80-yard drive, capped by Smith's grab with 2:29 to play. Tech scored again and went for the two points: Mike Stewart and John Hostetler wrestled with Randy Gallway in the mire, the ball ended up in the mud, and W&M ended up with a stunning upset over the state's most disliked team.

Still soaring, the Tribe destroyed Davidson by 56-10 and the stage was set for the Conference showdown with East Carolina.

And the Indians came fumbling back to earth.

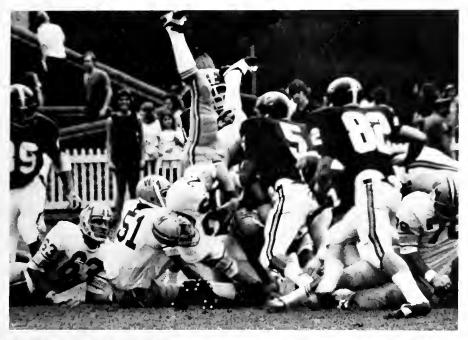

Four lost fumbles in the first half contributed to ECU's 21-0 intermission advantage, but W&M would not be counted out. Deery passed to Smith for a TD in the third period and the Tribe converted for two points. Early in the final period, McCutcheon scored on a 15-yard pass and the Tribe was alive. On fourth down, the Indians completed a pass for a first down, but an official conferred with the ECU bench and called a penalty on W&M for ineligible receiver downfield, some 20 seconds after the play had ended and had been declared a valid Tribe first down. The Tribe was forced to punt and never saw the ball again. The season finale against Richmond saw the Tribe without the services of stalwarts Gerhart, Bushnell, and Rovesti and the Spiders rolled to an easy 20-3 win and W&M finished with their third consecutive 5-6 season.

What used to be called freshman football was in 1972 packaged as Junior Varsity competition due to the freshman eligible rule. Still, even with the sophomores, the # quality of play changed little as small crowds and a scrimmage-type atmosphere prevailed. The need for a JV program has been challenged, but its purpose is clear — to allow freshman and sophomore players an opportunity to sharpen their skills and impress coaches.

The season got off to an unimpressive start as the tribe absorbed a 26–6 thrashing by Fork Union Military Academy. The Indians averted a shutout when Jim Krebs scored from one yard out in the fourth quarter.

Krebs gained 53 yards in seven carries as the Indians' lone offensive standout.

A 20-14 victory over US Army Prep evened the record as freshman Mark Griffith carried for 57 yards and two TD's and Krebs ran for 118 yards, including a 71-yard touchdown run. Lou Case intercepted three passes and Randy Knight had three receptions for 42 yards. The Tribe next hooked up with Staunton Military Academy and escaped with a 9-7 win on Steve Dalton's 22-yard field goal. Griffith continued his strong rushing with 80 yards and Ken Ahles contributed 57 more. Paul Kruis passed nine for 19 and 76

A chance for a winning record went by the boards in the season finale at Richmond as the Baby Spiders trounced the Tribe, 24–10. William and Mary trailed 17–0 in the third period, but came back on a 32-yard Dalton field goal and a two yard touchdown run by Ahles with five minutes to play. Richmond put the game out of reach, however, on their next possession with a 56-yard touchdown pass.

The future is both now and next year for Coach Al Albert's soccer team. Tribe booters were expected to be mediocre in 1972 with an inexperienced cast of freshmen and sophomores. Many of the talented Southern Conference Northern Division title winners of 1970 and 1971 had departed with their trophies. There was no way Coach Albert could win in 1972 with # fuzzy-cheeked rookies.

Apparently no one told Albert and his team. Indian booters won a third consecutive Northern Division title in 1972 by virtue of a 7–0 rout over VMI and a 3–0 whitewash of East Carolina. Outside of the Conference, the Tribe had its problems against the powerhouses of Virginia and North Carolina. But Albert's talented youngsters will be that much better next year when hopefully a year's maturity will propel the Indians to an even more successful campaign.

Weakness: the final attack. putting the ball in for the score. Attempts to improve deficient scoring with intensive practices resulted in deceptive stickwork and monopolizing play on the field. Captains Jane Harland and Cheryl Macklin took teams to the Tidewater Tournament with a passable 2-2-2 record. Outstanding players earned higher honors — positions on selective all-star teams. The Rugby Club began its second season in the fall plagued by a

"sophomore slump."

The ruggers achieved six victories last spring, but lost three of their first four matches in the 72–73 season. An opening win against the Norfolk Irish was followed by losses to Villanova, Georgetown, and Richmond. The Indians rebounded with a win versus Little Creek and a tie with James River.

Rugby is best described as a blend of football and soccer. Play is continuous, with no timeouts or substitutions. The club is run by the players themselves and its members are a mixture of undergraduates, graduates, and law students. What the sport lacks in strict organization, the participants' collective and individual spirit makes up.

Nothing short of perfection will satisfy Coach John Randolph and his talented cross country team. Successful seasons in the past forced them to find tougher competition, in order to gain the recognition they deserved. Despite competition from the best long distance runners in the East and Southeast, the Indians methodically dispatched their adversaries in an awesome display of depth. Veterans provided the experience necessary for a successful team, while new recruits added depth. This well rounded team then smashed ACC contingents Maryland and UNC as well as independents North Carolina Track Club, Georgetown, and Quantico. The Tribe, led by sophomore star Time Cook and junior Bill Louv, recorded near perfect scores in each of their dual meet victories. These meets served merely as warm-ups for the season goal of bettering past performances at the NCAA championships. The contingent from East Tennessee dealt a disappointing blow to the Indians in the NCAA District 3 meet in Knoxville. In placing second, the Tribe had four men in the top 25, led by Bill Louv with a fifth place showing. At the NCAA meet in Houston, the team placed eleventh, the third consecutive finish in the nation's top 25 for the harriers.

Coming off a 3-4 record last year, Coach Haynie expressed optimism about the gymnastics team. "I feel

this squad has more potential

than any I have coached at W&M in the past three years." The team was young, but talented with only two seniors competing. Team standouts were Bill Sordill, an all-around competitor, and sophomores Martin Rich and Don Fergusson, horizontal bar experts. The season opened with a loss, but the 94.90 points scored was nothing to be ashamed of, according to Coach Haynie.

An aggressive new coach, a basketball oriented athletic director, talented freshmen, and a new attitude - these were the ingredients which comprised what was advertised as the "new look for 1972" for William and Mary basketball. But the schedule remained as tough as in previous seasons. The young Tribe, with two freshmen and a sophomore as starters, began the season with successive losses. The Indians played their early games with verve if not consistency. Defense was the major early season problem as William and Mary

averaged 104 points given up

per game in its first three outings.
By the time school let out for the Christmas break, the Tribe sported an unenviable 1-6 record and Coach Ashnault threatened a shakeup when he intimated that he felt the younger players were outhustling the veterans.

Then Tribe Fortunes reversed themselves. A 63-60 win over Georgia Tech and two victories in the Scranton Invitational Tournament gave the Tribe a # modest three-game winning streak. At Scranton, Tom Pfingst and Mike Arizin made the all-tournament team and Arizin was voted Tournament MVP. William and Mary was brought back to earth in its first game of 1973: a 102-88 loss to Davidson. A change in strategy in the first half by the Tribe caused them to lose their lead, their momentum, and, subsequently, the game.

Another Southern Conference loss to Richmond put the Indians in the league cellar as the team broke for exams.

Following the exam break, the Tribe lost a tough 73-68 decision at East Carolina and then to Wake Forest, a game in which William and Mary led at halftime, but eventually lost at the foul line. Disastrous road losses at Cincinnati and VPI, in which the Gobblers tallied a school record 127 points, preceded the Indian's

First victory in over a month —

a home win over VMI. Indian road woes continued in an 82-63 thrashing by Pitt on regional TV, but the Tribe avenged an early season loss to the Citadel by beating the Bulldogs 83-74, behind Mike Arizin's clutch shooting. Despite a 28 point performance by Arizin four days later, Rutgers defeated the Tribe 97 - 78.

Immediately after the disastrous road trip, Coach Ashnault declared a "new" season for the cagers. Two wins and losses preceded a display that proved that something new was in the offing

for W&M basketball. The maturing Tribe squeaked by heavily favored West Virginia after losing a big lead in the final quarter. The hero of the game was team defense, something not seen on the Reservation in a long time. The Tribe took 5 of 8 in its new season and went into the Southern Conference Tourney in fifth place. In first round action, the Tribe destroyed The Citadel 97-72, as Tom Pfingst tallied 28 points and the team played one of its finest games of the year. In the semi-finals, the Indians met Davidson, regular season champs. In a poorly officiated game, the Tribe hung tough, but trailed by 10 with three minutes to play. Clutch plays and a final basket by Matt Courage forced a tie with 3 seconds left, but a questionable foul call gave Davidson a free shot and the game. The Tribe loses only Seward, Spack, and Trammell, and every indication is that the new season will continue next year and years following.

A combination of new freshmen and old varsity players resulted in a team with much potential, the best girl's basketball team that William and Mary has had in the last few years, according to Coach Pat Crowe. But the team was off to

William and Mary's youthful wrestling team compiled an impressive 11-2 dual meet record during the 72-73 campaign, while claiming seven individual titles in the Virginia State Intercollegiate meet, but finished second to East Carolina for the second consecutive year. The Indians began the season with eight dual meet wins, before losing successively to Maryland and ECU, but finished the year with impressive wins over their last three opponents. Virginia state champs were

Mark Belknap, Tom O'Brien, John Kaila, who was voted outstanding wrestler for the meet, Dick Whittaker, Scott Moyer, Mike Furiness, and Greg Freaney. In the conference tournament, the Indians took three individual titles and four runner-up spots. Conference champs were Belknap, who was selected as the outstanding performer of the tournament, Moyer, and Furiness. # A new skipper, Les Roos, brought the Tribe ship under control. The new baseball mentor constructed a solid club out of the loose ends left in the wake of 1972's 14-17 record. Co-captains Bill Harris and Hunter Robinson led a club that counted heavily on team speed, pitching, and defense for its success. Speedsters Paul Scolaro, Mike Gratton, and Dave Crocker promised to challenge opposing catchers with their baserunning. Keystone combo Charlie Bish and Ferris Allen, flanked by Corky Bishop at first and Robinson at third backed up an able mound staff. Ace lefty Scott Kramer headlined the pitching corps with help from John Mileson and Mike Bujakowski. A slash in funds eliminated the usual trip to Florida, leaving the Indians with a predominately home schedule.

A Man For All Seasons

they called him as he received the college's coveted Thomas Jefferson Award on Charter Day. No single phrase could have captured J. Wilfred Lambert more accurately. At once, he was the Vice President for Student Affairs, the College's stockbroker, resident historian, and guardian of the campus dorms. In a single day the man whose name is synonomous with William and Mary could mete out the sternest discipline, dominate committee meetings, chat about making omelettes on Barrett corner, and play with faculty children in the Sunken gardens.

Dean Lambert. Forever destined to that title, because most people remembered him that way. A 1927 College graduate with a degree in Psychology. Graduate work at Johns Hopkins. Back to his "beloved" Williamsburg in 1931 as an instructor in Psychology. Appointed Dean of Freshmen, then rising to Dean of Men, Dean of Students, and Registrar. A man whose talents and interests ranged from the stock market, to the College's most obscure (and interesting) histories, including the location of the east half of the Jefferson gate. A man who could hug a graduating coed as she walked through the Wren Building for the last time. And a man for whom William and Mary is the way of life.

"This is a seven-daya-week, 24-hour-a-day job and we just love it!"

 Zoe Graves. During the good days and the rough spots the Graves team stuck it out. Whether it was Andrew playing with friends in Wren Courtyard, Eliza dressing up for visitors, or Dr. Graves playing with their Labrador retriever Victoria, they lent an intensely personal feeling to the College's highest office. Mrs. Graves constantly opened the house to visitors, and during Christmas break served kool-aide and cookies to children from the Williamsburg Pre-school, then lead a dozen children up to the playroom to try out the toys. At the end of an afternoon Tom Graves might drop by baseball practice, and then make a quickie dormitory survey on the way home to dinner with community friends. Tom Graves. A man to whom there is more to a college than just an image. A man to whom we are a "nearly great" institution and to stay that way we have to be awfully good at what we do. A man who believes in the responsibility students and administrators have not only to each other but to themselves. Essentially demonstrating this is a reorganization of the student affairs program to bring student affairs closer to the student and more in line with academics.

"We encourage freedom, not license. We say that with freedom goes responsibility, and our students are acting responsibly." — Tom Graves. It's the Graves team because that's just the way it is. A family intimately involved in this college and loving every minute of it. Perhaps not as endeared in Richmond as on campus, but even this in time.

"My wife stayed up until four a.m. making that gingerbread house for the children who'll be visiting the house. The dome leans a little, but I think they'll like it just the same."— Tom Graves

Law provides a framework defining permissible actions. And sanctions for those who stray from its confines. Today's law students view law as an instrument of change, and they grow impatient when courts and legislatures are slow to implement reforms. Because established legal norms often discourage change and repress innovation, legal education is

Previously, laboratory space was the critical factor in limiting enrollment. Dropping the lab requirement has greatly increased the enrollment in upper level courses, especially by non-concentrators fulfilling area and sequence requirements. With the 19 faculty members, each involved in varying levels of research, the department recently adopted a policy statement of committment in balance between teaching and research, with an emphasis on the undergraduate program.

A number of new course offerings were developed. Chemistry professors devised a qualitatively oriented introductory course for the non-major. Reflections on the college-wide emphasis on individualized academic programs: The economics department liberalized concentration requirements with a trend towards independent study. with contemporary economic developments. Basically dedicated to training economists and preparing those who will enter graduate schools, the department also taught those needing a solid background in the subject.

The department of English had little time for innovation this year, focusing most of its attention on the Self Study program. Self study has brought about far-reaching curriculum changes in the past; department chairman Carl R. Dolmetsch looked for similar results in the 1972–1973 survey. In addition, the department diligently sought to recruit black professors.

Cutting back.

As the history department put it, "the number of persons admitted to the William and Mary doctoral program was reduced to only those candidates who are nationally competitive." Why? A long, hard look at the national market for Ph.D.'s showed that it just was not enough to absorb the numbers being turned out. This realistic approach was reflected in the third largest enrollment of undergraduate concentrators. And by numerous non-concentrators registering in history courses. New offerings were especially timely. The Paris Peace Talks sparked interest in "American Policy in the Cold War." Traditionally strong in the American, Latin American, and European areas of historical study, the department still needed to grow in the area of Asian studies. Future expansion will probably take place in this area.

The Math department, with a new focus on computer science, hoped to substantially broaden the research emphasis during the year. Professors faced the task of training professional mathematicians and providing computer science training for graduates in other fields. At the intra-department level, attempts were made to incorporate students into all academic activities, to widen student representation on committees, and to solicit support of math-related projects.

An almost entirely non-credit department as of this year. ROTC counted 134 members of the college community as participants in its military training programs. But academic ### credit was harder to come by.

Cadets could receive six hours toward their academic degree, but these courses had to be "Military History" and "Civil and Military Relations" rather than strategy and practically oriented work. The social relations aspects of the ROTC curriculum seemed to indicate that the department was concerned about the role of the military as well as the reduced status of the military on campus.

Two new officers joined the small William and Mary cadre this fall, Col. Spencer T. Hockaday and Major Peter J. Emanuel. Both brought the view that the Volunteer Army will have no great impact on the ROTC role. Instead, VOLAR would effect the lowest enlisted ranks. Spencer and Hockaday did predict, though, that ROTC's numerical enlistment would suffer with the draft incentive gone. They felt they had less cause for worry at William and Mary because freshman enrollment was up from the past several years.

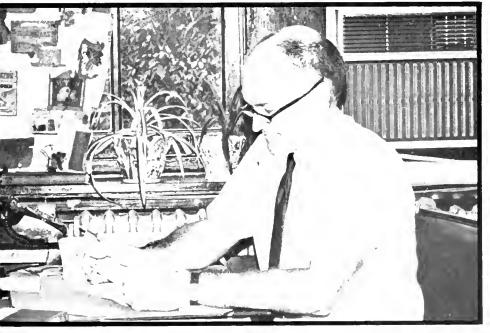

Contrary to the national trend Modern Languages

maintained a stable position

in William and Mary's curriculum. A reduction in the foreign language requirement has not affected the department's enrollment. Reasons included a language oriented student body. Fifty percent of the entering freshmen at William and Mary have at least four years of foreign language background. And many elect to continue.

New courses included Modern Languages 203: East Asian Languages, a survey in systems of writing. Future plans include concentrations in Russian and Italian.

Authorization to fill area and sequence requirements skyrocketed enrollment in music classes. Tight budgeting characterized the department. Technical upkeep of pianos and the cost of securing instruments for loan placed strains on the budget.

Supporting all liberal arts curricula, philosophy stands as the #### method to exploratory madness.

Systematic analytic examination of concepts enables the formation of intelligent, rational opinions the hallmark of the educated man.

Pride in the unusual rapport between faculty and students characterized the philosophy endeavor. Personalized instruction led to individualized conclusions: Confidence in the results permeated philosophy study. As a method, philosophy relates to any field — as demonstrated in the imaginativeness of curriculum additions. Upper level courses broadened their bases with the opening of such classes as "Philosophy of Language".

Understanding that physical education requires courses that have value to carry past the collegiate experience, the departments of physical education offered courses for the individual, in addition to the traditional team sports. Proficiency tests were given for student exemptions in various sports.

The tests were difficult:

although few elected to try for exemptions, even fewer received actual credit. Lack of facilities and overcrowded classrooms led to discussions for the removal of the sophomore physical education requirement. The underlying emphasis of the departments was not the time-old notion that a sound mind must exist in a sound body. Rather, it was that physical education provides a particularly enjoyable part of the overall liberal arts education.

An ongoing process education, physics, the world. Beginning in nursery school, and continuing after graduation from college through the media, museums, planetariums, and popular literature. Thus, the department offered topics of instruction that ranged from "Physics of Music" and a freshman colloquium titled "Intelligent Life in the Universe" to Ph.D. research in magnetism in crystals. Hopefully, through the department, the educational process was one that switched gradually from being imposed on a student to one that began with him. In his words, "If a graduate of William and Mary is curious about nature, and does something about it, we have succeeded.

The accent was on research

in the Psychology Department. Topics ranged from juvenile delinquency to alcoholism, from emotions to ESP. The department's association with Eastern State Hospital became more formalized with the development of the Psychiatric Research Institute. A welcome addition to the staff was clinical psychologist Dr. Miriam Cardi, who offered expertise in community clinics to the department.

Worldwide change was mirrored in Sociology; with new evaluations of post-industrial society abounding, the department's curriculum was adapted to test them. Honors sociology requirements left written theses behind, substituting a credit course in methodology. ## "The Noble Experiment," featuring 84 sophomore guinea pigs, casual corduroy furniture, resident "parents," impromptu parties, and a house keypunch unit. Project Plus. William and Mary's first step toward the total 'live and learn' experience. Born of the General Honors Program, the co-ed academic/social unit received the faculty's and administration's imprimatur last spring. Selection of residents followed. For once, it wasn't based on grades, but instead on the individual's capacity to contribute. And communicate.

As stated, the purpose of Project Plus was to draw together fragments of the arts, natural sciences, and social sciences into a single theme: The Future of Technological Society. In reality, the guestion of whether or not such an unorthodox approach to education could possibly work was equally important. Project members learned what it felt like to be bombarded with questions, saturated by the media, and, at times, intruded upon by those who had to see it for themselves. Isolation wasn't a major drawback, as had been predicted. Project Plus was the cultural center of the campus, with literally 24 hour-a-day possibilities. Involvement ranged from collogs and tutorials to Sunday evening interest meetings and late night swimming excursions. Unit 9 of the New Complex also housed the College's very first attempt at an interim semester. It wasn't four-one-four, but it wasn't classrooms, lectures, papers, and tests, either. With course offerings from auto mechanics to interior decorating, and a full schedule of quality movies and speakers, participants spent a month learning skills as well as textbook theories.

Not unexpectedly,

Project Plus had its problems.

After 14 years of the traditional educational processes, it was hard to just let loose. Or to remember that grades weren't important any more. Some felt alienated from the campus mainstream, while others had found their niche and were bitter about the prospects of being pushed back into the system when the year ended. There was even disappointment as some sophomores discovered that changing the environment didn't always change those in it. Or change them "in the right direction.

The overall results, though, were unbelievable. Project Plus was more than anyone had dared hope for. Not only did the progressive live and learn that theories work in practice, but they saw them work well. President Thomas A. Graves' October musing, "How do we spread the message of Project Plus throughout the campus?" was a very real question by spring the BSA was not content. The BSA stood helpless as recommendations went unheeded. Working hardest for increased participation in departmental affairs; trying to find a place for "staff" in the statement of Rights and Responsibilities. The old problems of bad roads, no parking and dismal dormitories persisted. The year began with a review of the "General Activities fee;" it continued with the tabling of Bill Brun's "General Minimum Housing Standards" plan. Despite all this - progress.

In a purely advisory capacity;

Serving the students,

the Student Association had finally grasped the reason for its existance. They provided 14¢ movies, $30 refrigerator rental, free telephone books and a charter flight to Europe along with their traditional services: the course evaluation guide, Green and Gold, speakers series, Bookfair, and the Hoi Polloi. The students appreciated it too, as they turned out in record numbers for the Sept. 27 SA senatorial election. Pushing for academic change: initiating the formation of the collegewide committee to study and change the academic calendar; pressing for departmental student-faculty liaison committees; and for the formation of a College Assembly allowing students access to decisions on academic budgeting matters.

Working together

Fourteen college wide committees staffed by students, faculty and administrators. Involved in specific areas of college concern. Students on each committee appointed by President Graves from recommendations made by the Student Association President. A successful pre-registration for seniors prompted the registration committee to expand the program to include juniors in 1973. Student jobs and work — study programs were coordinated by the Student Aid and Placement Committee. A threatened Lake Matoaka and Crim Dell concerned the Environment Committee. The Motor Vehicle Board was established for appealing traffic tickets: the Discipline Committee, for appealing dormitory infractions. Serving in advisory capacities were Orientation, Athletic, Library, Foreign Studies and W&M Hall Committees.

Keeping a viable honor system is a constant challenge in the seventies. Wide-spread theft on campus aroused skepticism. Can man be trusted in a high-pressured academic environment? Solutions to this problem stumped the Honor Council. Renovations began last year by a merger of the men's and women's Councils. New states of the metamorphosis unfolded. Changes and improvements in freshman orientation. Individual meetings with new professors. Channeling student support was a vital need. Question sessions six hours each week attempted to clarify honor code vagueness.

Concerts, dances, mixers, and films. Orientation aides performed activities as diverse as the students they met. One day a tour guide; the next, Ann Landers. Orienting freshmen to all aspects of college life. Escorting them everywhere well, almost everywhere. Procedural changes caused freshmen to walk alone through their first registration - perhaps the place they needed guidance the most.

Conflict between the decadent elements and reactionary islands of the staff resulted in a Review format xeroxed from last year's issues. Incorporation into the College's official structure, and the existence of such innovative programs as Project Plus put the Reading Program into a much different light this year. No longer was it a maverick group getting the administrative cold shoulder, and beating its head against Ewell Hall. In 1973, the intellectual mood on campus was ripe for this Program. John Barth came to read "Chimera". Pauline Koner danced out her perceptions of the world. And Buckminster Fuller talked about his geodesic dome. All as part of a presentation dealing with the artist's view of the world. Both retreats had been one of the rare occasions that allowed for informal student-faculty and administrative interaction. 1973 brought such relationships to the fore as everyday routine. And forced the retreat committee to chart another course.

Frustrated.

How else could you describe the Young Democrats? Watching in disbelief as Republican Bill Scott came from behind to defeat incumbent Senator Bill Spong. Virginians elected seven Republicans to the House of Representatives, compared to only three Democrats. Not to mention the Presidential landslide. These defeats weren't from lack of work, however. The YD's mobilized 225 workers through a dorm captain system, canvassed city and county-wide, and dutifully got voters to the polls on Election Day, Regrouping under President Rich Gillespie. The YD's attended the State Democratic Convention at Roanoke in March. Then rolled up their sleeves and pitched in to work as the Party pulled itself back together.

with nationally acclaimed artists, a Black Homecoming float and speaker Joseph Washington dominated the year's activities. Second semester publication of "Involved, a much expanded BSO brochure, gave written and photographic presentation of the Black cause on campus. Telling the story of how it was to be an African-American on the William and Mary campus was not an easy task. As BSO leader Kermit Dance put it "And so it is that the BSO is experiencing a more concerted effort than ever before to serve as a media of communication and expression for Blacks. We are saying to the College Community that 'we are determined to be a part, but we are equally determined to be Black!' '

In themselves, in the world, as individuals and as a body, Canterbury Association members sought to spread the Christian way. "Wesley is what the people make it," declared one of the Methodist youth foundation's members. And so it was. If one wished to drop by the Wesley House, chances were good that he would find it full of friends and fellowship.

A warm fire, too, if the night was chilly. On the other hand, Wesley was a place to go when life looked bleak. Like all campus-oriented church organizations, Wesley sought to make William and Mary living a little more personal.

The primary task facing the L.F.C. in the 1972-1973 year was to equalize all 12 of the fraternities in terms of enrollment and financial stability. To meet this challenge, the I.F.C.

revamped rush rules so freshmen could frequent the fraternities during the day. The I.F.C. again enjoyed financing many social functions, this fall's dance at W&M Hall, the intrafraternity games, and the Greek Games party in the spring. Alpha Delta is the law school's oldest and largest professional fraternity. Its purpose is to coordinate the study of law with the actual practice of law. Many means were used to accomplish that goal. Locally, student-faculty social activities a speaker's program, and a visit to the State Penitentiary. At the national level, scholarships, loans, insurance, and a placement program were offered. An organization that sought to make the transition from classroom to corporation or courtroom a little more graceful.

Organized at Marshall-Wythe in 1965, Phi Delta Phi is the largest legal fraternity in the United States. In addition to sponsoring scholarships and giving financial aid to law students, the fraternity made trips to Washington to watch the Supreme Court, and held the Legal Forum Speaker's program. Social activities included the annual wine and cheese party, Friday afternoon kegs, and pre-football game

This book is the result of long hours and hard work put in by many people. Thanks go to the following: Mr. Morris Ollove and Stevens Studios for the class portraits and numerous candids. Carl Peterson, Kit Hardy, and Skip Uldricks of Western Publishing Company for their extra consideration and assistance. Fritz Hafner, William and Mary's representative from Western for his time and advice. Vice President Lambert, Dudley Jensen, Hugh Easler, Colonel Green, Ken Smith, Harriett Stanley, and Louis Catron for their willing cooperation. Also to the "after midnight" crowd: Brian O'Boyle, Libby Peterson, Nancy Tienken, Brenda Watkins, Nancy Stone, Peggy Moler, Julie Claypool, Paul Collins, Anne Davis, and Carolyn Schuler. And a very special thank you to Sally.

"The mood of the entire country has Changed," remarked a returning POW. And indeed, it had changed. The violence of the 60's was gone, and so were the questions, for the most part -— at least they seemed less frequent and less pointed. Those who had resorted to working outside "the system" decided to give it a chance. Pushing for change, young America nominated George Ms Govern, only to be disappointed and disillusioned with him. The election deteriorated into a relatively routine affair, and we somehow chose four more years of Nixon. All that America wanted now was "peace and quiet". (Or had we been bought off with liberalized abortion laws, a feeling that boycotts could do something about spiraling prices, and the return of the POW's?)

Even the ITT scandal, the Watergote caper, and the Russian grain deals failed to outrage citizens after a while... "This sort of thing happens all the time," wrote someone to the Washington Post. Since moral fervor cannot be generated for an indefinite period of time, Mr. Nixon sat in his White House and waited for the uproar to die down.

Which way America? Some sought answers to the questions by trying to accomplish things in a small way: tactions working on service projects, for local reforms, for minority groups. Or individuals searching for personal improvement and fulfillment. Others chose to escape into the past, as a wave of nostalgia swept the country.

The mood of the campus changed, two. Starting with changes in the administration: new faces and newly-created positions. Campus-wide, the "Paschall way" was going out the window. The College finally began renovating the old dormitories, although the project would take years. You didn't have to register in hot, crowded Blow Gym anymore. But the comparatively short time it took to register in W&M Hall was counterbalanced by the time spent trying to get your ID card picture taken. There were no more hassles for women with green, yellow, or white cards for aftercurfew visits. The infirmary no longer gave you am enbelope of Bufferin and told you to "run along". Dr. Richard Cilley, the infirmary's only full-time doctor, found time to see each and every patient, Even if sometimes you had to wait two hours.

You didn't get an F'if you failed a course any more. Somehow, "NC" didn't look as offensive on your grade report as that Fdid. Finding a parking place on campus was still tough, but the incompleted parking lot by Phi Bete helped. (Though on those rainy days it was like wading through the Dismal Swamp.) With the completion of the Social Sciences building, ten minutes between classes seemed all too short when your next class was in the Wren Building. And, as luck would have it, the class after that was always back in the Social Sciences building.

A warm spring day meant cancelling your classes, just as a cold one had done in the winter. The snowfall during exams provided plenty of opportunities for good old study breaks. Tollowed by asking youself the why-didn't-I-study-more question.

Dorm life meant a party for any (and every) occasion! For a rammate's birthday, after a hard test, or just for the heck of it. And then, moments... sometimes, after the party broke up... when there were quiet talks long into the night. Moments of wandering off alone to bake Matoaka—just to think. This was the year of establishing priorities, of making choices. And the road taken was what made you you.

The same rule hold for us now, of course: we choose our next world through what we learn in this one Learn nothing, and the next world is the same as this one....
